He Was Nervous, But the Saleswoman Knew What He Wanted. He was only one of several hundred customers in a large Washington street establishment, and there was nothing to a casual observer that would have distinguished him from the mass of humanity that was pushing and crowding him along.

It was Saturday afternoon, and he had come in on an excursion. The conductor had forgotten to take the check out of his hat, and he was afraid he'd lose it, so had pinned it to the band. His face was of the shade of red that showed plainly that harvest was over, while his sand-colored trousers looked like the front legs of an elephant.

He had stood gazing in the window in a sheepish, half-frightened manner for ten minutes before he came in, and after glancing nervously around had darted into the store between two real old, motherly-looking ladies. His eyes wandered nervously from one to another in the crowd, and then afraid of being recognized, and then he was slowly pushed along by the crowd toward the little black-haired clerk, who had been watching him with some amusement. She was standing at the button counter at the time.

The crowd stopped in its irregular ebb and flow, and the young man was grounded directly in front of her, his face rosier than ever. Perspiration started to his forehead in great beads as she approached with a smile. He stammered, took off his hat, raised one foot and slowly scratched the other leg with it and tried to speak. It was of no use. He just couldn't.

"No use," she said, kindly, as she came up, "don't worry about it. You want to look at baby carriages. This way, please." His hat dropped to the floor, and he gasped as though choking on a spoonful of prunes. "Why--it was only Wednesday--how'd you know?" he stammered. "Never mind," she replied, kindly. "We get so we can tell. Here is a nice one for five dollars." It was just what he intended to pay, and he bought it as though in a dream. And then he walked out with the red check still fastened to his hat band with the tell-tale safety pin.--Indianapolis Sentinel.

SALTED SUICIDES. A Curious Judicial Proceeding in Old-Time France. People Who Killed Themselves Were Tried by Jury and Their Corpses Sentenced to Ignominious Treatment.

The embalming of human bodies is at present done by the undertakers, and there are few physicians, probably, who, if called upon to perform the operation, would be able to do so without consulting their books and reading up on the subject. In olden times the case was different, and in France especially, before the revolution, says a writer in the Revue Scientifique, medical men were frequently called upon to embalm cadavers, although the operation was applied almost wholly to one class of subjects, i. e., to suicides. But why were the cadavers of suicide embalmed, and what was the process used?

"Suicide," says Beccheria, "is an offense which it seems can be submitted to no punishment properly so called, since such punishment could be inflicted only upon an insensible or lifeless body, or upon innocent persons. Now, any punishment that might be meted out to the inanimate remains of the culprit would produce no other impression upon the spectators than that which they would experience in seeing a statue flogged."

And yet, according to the custom of Brittany, which was also general in France, if anyone killed himself intentionally, he was hanged by the feet and then dragged like a murderer and his personal effects sold to whomsoever wished to purchase them. In some cases he was tied face downward to a hurdle, dragged through the streets behind a dung cart driven by the public executioner, hanged from the top of the gibbet erected in the public place, and then thrown into the sewer. It was also ordered that all remembrance of the deceased should be obliterated and suppressed forever.

But before any such proceeding took place, the cadaver was accorded a fair trial before a judge, whose duty it was to begin by making an official inquiry into the circumstances attending the act of suicide, the place where it occurred, the life and habits of the deceased, etc. This having been submitted to the king's procurator, the nearest of kin and the heirs of the suicide were summoned by trumpet to come forward and provide him with a defender. In case they failed to make their appearance, the judge appointed a counsel for him, whose duty it was to defend his client to the best of his ability by cross-questioning the witnesses for the prosecution and offering all the excuses possible in extenuation of the offense. If the accused was found guilty, he was punished in the manner above described; but if he was adjudged innocent, that is to say, if the act of suicide was decided to have been committed in a moment of insanity, he was buried in consecrated ground.

In either case, however, it was necessary to preserve the cadaver for the entire length of the trial, which sometimes lasted for several months, so that in case the accused was found guilty he might not escape punishment. Hence the necessity of embalming, or "salting," as it was called.

It appears from the old records that the operation and materials used were as follows: The viscera of the cranial, thoracic and abdominal cavities were removed and the spaces stuffed with tow that had been soaked in a solution composed of one ounce of camphor, two ounces of Sootrine aloe and one gallon of alcohol. Deep incisions were then made in different parts of the body, and the latter was packed in salt in a wooden box, which, having been covered and nailed, was formally delivered to the jailer for safe keeping.

This method of preserving cadavers seems to have been successful except in a few instances in which the habits of solitary study grew stronger together, finding no vent except in a peevish memorial addressed to the minister of war on the proper training of youth in French military schools. Nevertheless, he found almost if not altogether for the first time a boy friend in the person of Des Mazis, his room-mate, a youth noble by birth and nature, a pensioner, moreover, like himself.--Prof. Sloane, in November Century.

COLD FOOD FOR BREAKFAST. Why the Early Meal in England Differs from That in America. The English breakfast is a meal not understood by us. It may be served in the dining room or in the library. It is more often "on call" than en famille, and there is a total absence, even in the highest circles, of formality in dress or in service. The viands are, for the most part, cold. The English will tell you that this is because they have learned that cold meats are more digestible than hot, and that it is vulgar to eat a heavy meal early in the day, but a shrewd observer in the New York Times attributes their preference to a combination of lazy servants and old-fashioned stoves, which renders it difficult to get a "heavy meal early in the day." Where hot dishes are served they are apt to be "mired real," or a few thin, crisp slices of Irish bacon. These, with new-laid eggs, invariably boiled or steamed, which latter is done at table, are all that are within reach. The cold meats, consisting of ham, tongue, "collared head," etc., are placed on the sideboard. As no servant is expected to be in attendance at this meal, the gentlemen of the family go back and forth from table to sideboard, serving those who ask for helpings. The thoughtless, uninitiated American might object to such confusion and inconvenience, but John Bull delights in an affection of simplicity, and accomplishes informality in his usual clumsy fashion. Such a convenience as a table bell is an unknown article of furnishing. Should the servant by any chance be wanted when out of the room, even at dinner, the mistress will rise from her chair and cross to the mantel, by the side of which is an electric button, or bell push, communicating with the kitchen.

Those who have the most have it as a rule, because they save the most. They're more economical. These people buy Pearline. Proof--in all stores of the better class throughout the land, you'll find the sales of Pearline far in the lead. Now, these economical people wouldn't use Pearline for their washing and cleaning, if they didn't find it to be just what we say--the most economical in every way. Would they? Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE--Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, he's dishonest--send it back. 49 JAMES TYLER, New York.

BEGINS BUSINESS TOMORROW

Western Express Company Makes Its New Year's Bow to the Public.

DEATH OF A VETERAN IN THE LIGHT HOUSE SERVICE.

Yesterday's Music—Funeral of James Dwyer—Civil Service Examination. Change of Time on D. S. S. & A.

LOCAL AGENT APPOINTED.

Gen'l Manager W. L. Stout of the Dominion Express company and Superintendent Ford of the Western Express company are in the city completing the preparations for the new company's start in business on the South Shore and Soo lines tomorrow morning. They are accompanied by Mr. H. P. Sharpe, who has been selected as the agent of the company in this city. Mr. Sharpe is a young man, but has had large experience in the business. He was with Wells, Fargo & Co. in Galveston, Tex., and after service with other companies has had charge for the last two years of one of the Dominion Express company's Toronto agencies. He has a very pleasing address and cannot fail to make a favorable impression upon all who are brought into business relations with him in his new position in this city.

The Western has leased the east store in the Opera House block and will open for business there tomorrow, the force of carpenters employed having nearly completed the fixtures necessary. The company's sleighs and delivery wagons are already here and from the very start it will aim to give as complete and satisfactory delivery and collection service as has ever been attempted by the American. The minor appointments in the Marquette office will be completed today and as there will be no change in the messengers on the two railroads, all the old men entering the service of the new company, it will begin its business career full armed for the fray. The change will be made so smoothly that the public will hardly know that it has taken place.

Both Gen'l Manager Stout and Superintendent Ford state that the rates under the Western company will be fully as low and in many cases lower than under the old order of things. On all points east and west to be reached by the Canadian Pacific system the company will have an advantage over the American and through its connections with the United States Express company at Champion and the Adams at St. Ignace, more especially the former, it will give just as satisfactory service as the American to all parts of the country and certainly will have to meet the American's rates in order to get its share of the business.

The competition between the old and the new companies promises to be keen and cannot fail to prove to the advantage of the people of Marquette. This fact has already been made manifest by the extension of the American's delivery and collection service to remote parts of the city and also by the cutting down of the running time of the morning train down from Republic to enable the new company to reach Marquette as early as the American's teams can get down from Negaunee, the new time going into effect yesterday and bringing the train referred to into Marquette at 10:25 instead of 10:55.

The officials of the American state that their force in this city will be kept up to its present state of efficiency and that every effort will be made by the company to hold its Marquette business at all hazards. The service between this city and Negaunee by team will begin tomorrow morning and the company intends to make it so efficient that the people will not suffer any inconvenience whatever from the retirement of the American from the South Shore road.

A Veteran Lightkeeper.
Casper Kuhn, for the past nineteen years keeper of the range lights at Grand Island, died at his home in this city on Spring street near Fifth, on Friday evening at 10:30 o'clock, aged sixty years. Mr. Kuhn had been ailing for the past three months, his trouble being caused by two slight strokes of paralysis. The third stroke came on Friday and, as is usually the case, proved fatal.

Mr. Kuhn had been in the lighthouse service for thirty-three years, over half of his life, and was entitled to a place in the front rank of the veterans in that service on the great lakes. He helped to build the Marquette lighthouse as well as several others on this lake.

He leaves a wife and four children, three of them by his first wife and nearly all of years of maturity. His brother, Henry Kuhn, of Port Huron, arrived in the city yesterday to attend the funeral which will be held at 2 o'clock today from the German Lutheran church on Ridge street, the interment being in Park cemetery.

Yesterday's Services.

The services in Marquette churches yesterday were especially marked by the excellence of the music rendered and particularly was this case at the Baptist church, where the elaborate musical program prepared by Mr. Bartis was carried out most excellently, and at the Presbyterian church where fine music is now a recognized feature of every Sunday evening service and where the morning service was yesterday marked by two especially beautiful numbers, "Good Tidings," by Bartlett, given with violin obligato, and "O Holy Night" (Cantique de Noel) by Adolphe Adam, arranged for soprano solo and quartette by Dudley Back and also given with violin obligato. Miss Jaffney, the soprano of the Presbyterian quartette, has always been a favorite in Marquette and her voice was never heard with more pleasure than in her solos of yesterday. She is fortunate in possessing a pure and flexible voice of marked sweetness and power and her singing is distinguished by a very unusual clearness of enunciation, something which even in professionals of the highest rank is often sadly wanting. This happy combination of strength, purity of tone and clearness of enunciation was particularly noticeable yesterday when to one in the most remote sitting in the church every word came clear cut and distinctly intelligible.

Funeral of James Dwyer.

The funeral of James Dwyer, which took place yesterday afternoon, was one of the largest seen in the city for a very long time. There were nearly fifty sleighs in the cortege which escorted the remains from the residence on Hewitt avenue to St. Peter's cathedral where the services were held, the church being already well filled when the procession arrived. The interment took place in the family lot in the old Catholic cemetery. The bearers were William O'Meara, S. E. Byrne, George A. Royce, M. E. Asire, J. J. Flannagan and John Reddon.

Civil Service Examination.

The civil service commission at Washington has ordered that an examination be held in this city on Saturday, January 26, 1895, commencing at 9 o'clock a. m., for the grades of clerk and carrier in the city postoffice. Only citizens of the United States can be examined. The age limitations are as follows: For carrier, not under twenty-one nor over forty; for all other positions, not under eighteen years. No application will be accepted for this examination unless filed with the secretary in complete form, on the proper blank, before the hour of closing business on January 21, 1895.

The civil service commission takes this opportunity of stating that the examinations are open to all reputable citizens who may desire to enter the postal service, without regard to their political affiliations. All such citizens, whether Democrats or Republicans, or neither, are invited to apply. They shall be examined, graded, and certified with entire impartiality and wholly without regard to their political views or to any consideration save their efficiency, as shown by the grades they obtain in the examination.

For application blanks, full instructions, and information relative to the duties and salaries of the different positions, apply at the postoffice to Frank A. Wentworth, secretary board of examiners.

Tonella's "Tale of a Tub."
THE MINING JOURNAL has received a signed communication from Mr. Carl Tonella regarding Mr. Adams' reply to an article which appeared in these columns recently under the caption "The Tale of a Tub." As the communication goes further into the matter referred to than THE MINING JOURNAL cares to take its readers it is not published in its entirety, but Mr. Tonella is entitled to his denial of the statement in Mr. Adams' letter to the effect that he was arrested under a writ of capias. This he makes as follows: "As for Mr. Adams arresting me it is absolutely false, a lie of the first water. I never was arrested by Mr. Adams or anyone else. I was employed to pack and ship the furniture and followed the instructions of the owner. (Signed) Carl Tonella."

Change of Time.

A new time card went into effect on the South Shore road yesterday afternoon at 5:15. The only change in the new card which affects the passenger service is in the time of the morning train down from Republic which is set ahead half an hour. The train will hereafter be known as the "Western Express" and will arrive in Marquette at 10:25 instead of 10:55 a. m.
