The element of the unexpected which characterizes Irish fun crops out in other places besides the court room. It may be an old story, but it is as perennial as its subject, of the priest who preached a sermon on "Grace." "An'. me brethren," he said in conclusion, "If ye have wan spark av heavenly grace wather it, wather it continually." Another priest who had delivered what seemed to him an excellent and striking sermon was anxious to ascertain its effect on his flock. "Was the sermon today to y'r liking, Pat?" he inquired of one of them. "Troth, y'r riverence, it was a grand mon entirely," said Pat, with such genuine admiration that his reverence felt moved to investigate further. "Was there any one part of it more

SOLDIERS AND THEIR ROWS.

The investigation of hazing at West Point has shown that the cadets do their fighting with their fists according to the rules of the prize ring, says the Kansas City Star. In the German universities there is the well known custom of duels with foils. The students are in no danger except from scars on the face because the quelists are protected with quilted cuirasses over the chest and metal visors over the eyes. The scars on the cheeks are considered honorable and it may be suspected that the young men are glad to wear them. The fist fights at West Point are supposed to be winked at by the faculty. but when the cadets become officers in the army they are not permitted to engage in duels, and it would certainly be undignified and ridiculous on the part of officers and gentlemen to fight with their fists. In Germany and France the officers are expected to fight duels, when epithets are bandied, but in England and America the duel is prohibited in the army, as well as among civilians. The only recourse of an officer of the United States army, if he is insulted by another officer, is to file charges against him. It would seem, of course, that it is objectionable to report a man for applying an epithet to the complainant, but, when the rule against fighting is so stringent, there is nothing else to do. and it works as well as or better than the code in the European continental armies. Its effect is to prevent officers from engaging in altercations which may lead to an insult and a blow. Calling a brother officer a liar or
