

IT WAS AN EARTHQUAKE.

The Returns From Elections Are of Republican Victorias.

Interest Centered in the Contest in New York and Hill is Buried and Tammany a Hopeless Wreath—all Northern States Follow.

Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia Roll Up Resounding Republican Majorities.

The House of Representatives of the 54th Congress Safety Republican. No More Room for Democracy—Chance For Pop-gun Bills.

At about 9:00 p. m. of Tuesday last the wires began to bring us reports of the results of the elections, the republicans gathering at the rooms of the old Delta and Columbia clubs to receive them and the democracy at "Jimmy" Lyons' place.

Below will be found summary of results as far as ascertained before we go to press, and our readers can do their own "counting"—they will not need any prompting by us. That we rejoice need not be said; that every friend of American labor rejoices in the result encountered by the free-traders (for the elections everywhere turned on the question of protection must be admitted) is just as unquestionable.

MICHIGAN GOES SOLID.

The Republican State Ticket Sixty To Seventy Thousand Ahead.

The Congressional Delegation Solidly Republican From the First to the Twelfth—The Legislature Republican By Four-Fifths.

The electors of Michigan spoke with no uncertain voice on Tuesday. Gov. Rich and the whole state ticket is successful by a plurality which may reach 75,000, and the result as to congressmen and the members of the legislature is a majority for republicans larger than in any previous election.

For congress Corlies beats Griffin, in the first district, by 2,000. Gen. Spaulding, in the second, beats Barkworth (and the gerrymander) by 1,200. Burrows wins in the third, Thomas in the fourth, Smith in the fifth, Atkin in the sixth, Snover in the seventh, Limp in the eighth, Bishop in the ninth, Crump in the tenth, Avery in the eleventh, and in our own twelfth the candidate of Rush Culver and the opposition of the Mining Journal (with a little aid by republican voters), results in a majority for republicans larger than in any previous election.

PASSED OFF THE STAGE. They say that I've passed off the stage. Ah, well, it may be true.

CHAPTER I. Before Mooreland could decide what course to pursue, other callers came; but as soon as an opportunity occurred he began to write.

needed to arrange his speech in writing. After the customary interruptions from brush peddlers, photographers and city directory men, the declaration was finally composed, blue pencilled and edited to his satisfaction; then, throwing himself with studied impulsiveness at Sappho's dainty feet, he grasped her patient palm, and placing his notes on the floor, where he could refresh his memory, when necessary, he poured forth an outburst of eloquence expressive of undying love, and, pressing Sappho's hand to his lips, philled a sparkling ring from his pocket and forced it on her taper finger, at the same time throwing his right arm around her asymmetrical waist and raising himself to press a fervid kiss, when—

CHAPTER III. Before Mooreland could decide what course to pursue, other callers came; but as soon as an opportunity occurred he began to write.

CHAPTER IV. Two weeks after the episode in the studio Miss Dorothy Drummer and her niece were in Paris. The aunt, who never did anything by halves, had determined to take Constance entirely away from the polluted atmosphere of Mr. Mooreland; and having plenty of money and good health, notwithstanding an unmentionable number of years of New England life and pie, Miss Drummer thought this was a favorable occasion to see something of the world over the water.

CHAPTER V. On the steamer, among the few acquaintances they made, was a no longer young but very pleasing German baron. In order to distract Constance and take her mind as much as possible from her late "affair," Miss Drummer gave a warm welcome to this charming traveling companion, and the baron was constantly in their company. In Paris, his knowledge of the city made him invaluable, and his attention to the two ladies became very marked.

CHAPTER VI. Though Miss Drummer had, in the course of her well-preserved years, received many chances to "worse" her condition, she had never before met a man with the baron's charm of manner and numerous attractive traits. It was wonderful how her stern New England features relaxed and softened under a Paris bonnet; and she herself was astonished at her own reflection in the mirror when arrayed in a Worth costume. We all develop under approval and admiration, and the baron surrounded her with a dense atmosphere of both.

Suddenly, business complications made it necessary for Miss Drummer to return to New York. Expecting to be away but a short time, she left her niece with friends in Paris.

CHAPTER V. One morning, as Mr. Mooreland was passing down Broadway, he found himself face to face with Miss Constance Claxton's aunt. Yes, notwithstanding the charming bonnet and the stunning Worth costume, she was still recognizable.

CHAPTER VI. Miss Drummer's remorse at her mistake was unbending, and her apologies profuse. Before leaving the studio she began a long letter explaining everything to her niece; but so many plans were proposed and discussed that the letter was never finished.

CHAPTER VII. Her foreign trip had mellowed her New England ideas, and rendered her more capable of enjoying an artistic atelier and its surrounding atmosphere, and she found it very restful, after tiresome talks with her lawyer, to sink into a big chair in the calm and quiet of Mr. Mooreland's studio.

"WONT YOU SEE IF THAT RING FITS YOUR FINGER?"

CHAPTER VIII. A crash followed her remark. Sappho had fallen full length upon the hardwood floor. As Mooreland and Miss Drummer assisted her to a chair again, the obstinate engagement ring, which no effort had been able to remove from the wooden finger, suddenly slipped into Miss Drummer's hand; but at this moment a messenger, who had entered during the excitement, presented a cablegram for Miss Drummer. It read: "Dear Aunt: The baron and I were married this morning. Letter by mail. "CONSTANCE."

CHAPTER IX. A profound silence fell on the studio. It was Mooreland's voice that broke the stillness. "Miss Drummer—Dorothy—" he faltered, "won't you see if that ring fits your finger?" It fitted.

CHAPTER X. The following story of the late Henry W. Paine was told to a gathering of legal gentlemen the other day: A young lawyer consulted Mr. Paine in regard to the construction of a certain statute, and, after receiving that gentleman's interpretation of it, brought suit, depending upon the legal acumen of his adviser. The case was tried before a justice of the supreme court and was decided against Mr. Paine's protégé. The latter was astonished, for he had the most implicit confidence in the construction of the statute given by Mr. Paine, and, smarting with disappointment, immediately sought that gentleman. "Mr. Paine," he said, "the judge ruled against your interpretation of the law!" "He did?" replied Mr. Paine. "Well, Judge— is not so good a lawyer as I supposed."—Boston Budget.

CHAPTER XI. Abraham Lincoln was once on a journey with some fellow travelers, and when they stopped to water their horses he did not appear. The inquiry was made of the last man who came: "Where is Lincoln?" "Oh," he replied, "when I saw him last he had two young birds which the wind had blown out of their nests and he was hunting for the nest that he might put them back in it." When Lincoln came up the party began to laugh at his care for the young birds; but he said: "I could not have left if I had not restored those little birds to their mother."—Humane Journal.

'No,' says I. 'I'll give you my saddle,' says he. 'No,' says I. 'I'll give you my pony,' says he. 'No,' says I. 'I'll give you my gun and saddle and pony all in a bunch for a drink!'"

Guilty or Not Guilty. Clerk of Court—Well, gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict? Foreman—We have. Clerk—What say you? Do you find the prisoner at the bar guilty or not guilty? Foreman—We do. The Clerk—You do! Do what? Foreman—We find the prisoner at the bar guilty or not guilty. Clerk—But, gentlemen, you must explain. Foreman—Of course. You see, six of us find him guilty, and six find him not guilty.—Golden Days.

THE AFTERMATH.

They met to-day on State street, and Emma was there; she was surprised. She had to go to the hospital before their eyes.

AN EARLY CALL.

He proposed to her in the conservatory after supper; he did not go down on his knees or declare that life would be nothing to him without her, but he told her, simply and earnestly, that he had always loved her, and that as his wife it would be his duty to guard her from the world's rude buffeting.

"Why, Edith," she said rapidly. "I never thought to find you down so early. If you are going out don't let me keep you."

"What has he done? Oh, nothing unusual; they all do it sooner or later; but an engaged man is de trop at an affair of this kind. No girl wants him for her partner, and really, one can't blame them."

"Beauty is in the eye of the beholder," quoted Edith, lightly. She felt a longing to cry out, to bury her face somewhere, instead of which she must smile and look unconcerned and discuss this love affair with the indifference of a mere acquaintance.

"Yes, in the morning, at eleven." He bowed and withdrew just as her next partner came hurrying up.

A DRUMMER'S BLACK EYE.

It Created for Him No End of Annoyance and Vexation. Lemme tell you something, said the drummer as he slowly crossed the bandage which held the piece of raw hide tightly over his right eye and got both hands around it.

The interviewer pulled out his pocket-glass and looked to see if his eyes were all right and answered that he tumbled.

"You see, continued the afflicted, I have to take a certain amount of exercise with the clubs every night before retiring. Doctor recommended it for my lungs, you know, and I carry clubs in my trunk. Expands the lungs, braces up the spinal column, and strengthens the arms and shoulders."

"What has he done? Oh, nothing unusual; they all do it sooner or later; but an engaged man is de trop at an affair of this kind. No girl wants him for her partner, and really, one can't blame them."

"Beauty is in the eye of the beholder," quoted Edith, lightly. She felt a longing to cry out, to bury her face somewhere, instead of which she must smile and look unconcerned and discuss this love affair with the indifference of a mere acquaintance.

"Yes, in the morning, at eleven." He bowed and withdrew just as her next partner came hurrying up.

WHERE INSECTS DO THRIVE.

Experiences of a Traveler Through the Mountains of Montserrat. One of the first things that struck me in Montserrat was that nearly all the plantation houses were surrounded by white sand. When I asked about it I found the reason sufficiently startling.

"You see, continued the afflicted, I have to take a certain amount of exercise with the clubs every night before retiring. Doctor recommended it for my lungs, you know, and I carry clubs in my trunk. Expands the lungs, braces up the spinal column, and strengthens the arms and shoulders."

STOPPING SEAL-POACHING.

The Fur Seal Will Soon Become as Plentiful as Ten Years Ago. During the period before seal-shooting at sea became a regular business for dozens of vessels, the Alaska Commercial Co. owned for twenty years the lease of the fur seal islands, and was permitted by the government to take 100,000 seals each year, on which the company paid a revenue of $3 per skin, besides various extras.

A LION'S QUEER MEAL.

The Famished Creature Devours an Engineer's Axle-Grease. Last winter, when the snow-storms were so fearful throughout the mountains in Utah and the earth was covered with snow to the depth of five to ten feet and remained hidden so long, the wild animals were forced to desperation. The wolves were starved and weak, and what is known as the mountain lion almost perished from starvation.

SUNDAY IN RURAL SCOTLAND.

The Quietness and Restfulness of the Day in Villages and Small Towns. One may be no Sabbatarian and yet thoroughly enjoy the reposeful quiet of "the Lord's day" in an average Scottish village or small country town.

Their Pleasant Fellow.

This is how the nihilists spoke of the dying Tom. "To our brothers, the oppressed, we honor The Tyrant Alexander, autocrat, czar, baron, and assassin of Michaeloff, Kibulchik, Nelenoff, Sophia Ferwald, Justa Hallmann, and many others, members of the Siberian galleys, persecutor of our race, the point of execution hereafter, the spring of a systematic blood-bath, the consummation of a grand atrocity, the death of a noble man."

Too Bad He Failed.

Thomas Pool, in jail at Newberry for a month upon a girl of twelve, years ago, was arrested outside of Newberry, possibly dead.

The Davis Quits Shipping.

One shipment having ceased at the Davis mine a force of about fifty men was laid off last week and further operations will be confined to keeping the water out of the mine and a betterment of the iron market.
