The Mirror wishes him good luck. Mirror.

They Packed the Box!

The time had arrived when it was necessary that the gifts Mr. and Mrs. Fuspocket intended to send to their dear ones, should be made ready for shipment, if destination was reached before the festive year had passed beyond recall. Here, Mister, get back in line and stick to the text.

For six long weary months, perhaps more months but all weary, Mrs. Fuspocket had averted, sewed and stitched, made holes in good solid cloth and button stitched all around the holes to keep them there: had pulled long threads from linen that the weaver had taken so much pains to put in place, hemmed and hawed—no, stitched and then put lace all about the edges, that remained one of the lower portion of the old-fashioned pantalots—the girls, attempted to hold their stockings with when Fuspocket was a young man and had early hair.

Well to Fuspocket! It looked like the darndest kind of darned foolishness, have patience, the yarn ain't all used yet, but the female side had imported a woman's darning to help out and teach new stitches, so my darsen the gifts ain't ready yet, but some were and when Fuspocket closed the display he just had to agree that it was nice, though if the buttons had been on his drawers he would have been more comfortable and moved about more freely, for you see Fuspocket had always been fearful that man's only exclusive garment would at some time get the drop on him.

poor Fuspocket was alone with more women than the law allows to one man and so had to be circumspect, why? too-certainly. Well he just had to be "even" been there? but Fuspocket was in trouble to learn the size of the box required; so in his own peculiar boss like way requested information. Mrs. Fuspocket glanced at him with pity in her glance, one of those crushing glances that imply astonishment that he had a little sense, and looking down upon him she was on top of the desk, attempting to drape a decorated jug that was on a corner bracket, with a thin pink scarf with small tennis balls on the ends, then spoke Mrs. Fuspocket, saying: "Listen, my deary, get a box about so long and so high and so deep, using her arms to express her ideas, and if her arms had been longer the box would have been bigger, so large that it filled with strawberries at this season of the year would make a fortune for the possessor, but Mrs. Fuspocket had in mind the room, the quantity of space required for the issue paper, that had festooned around and about the gifts, to make them look nice and large (say) 100 on ever notice how much ball there was about a walnut and how little meat there was in the shell? lots of them were as thin as a wafer and as large as a plate. Fuspocket had decorated for the box and when he returns they'll pack it."

Wrestling With Shakespeare.

"Some are born great, while some become greater, thrust upon them." The latter was the case of most of the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Clarke, Tuesday night, when the best announced that the task of the evening was the illustration of some well known quotations from Shakespeare.

While no decision was reached as to the merits of the drawings and the success of each in expressing, with pencil, the thought of the poet, the general idea seemed to be that Messrs. Putnam and Kefauver were about equally entitled to praise. Mr. Putnam by means of a fish pole, line and fish attached, with significant letters "G. C." underneath his polo indicated that "I was what most took to this our Great poet, 'That he has chosen so great' while a well executed picture of a horse was Mr. Kefauver's way of expressing "I come to bury Casar."

Had there been a booby prize Mrs. Middlebrook and Mrs. Kimball would certainly have been obliged to draw lots as their sketches seemed to convey absolutely no ideas to the kind minds of the Manistique's 300.

Rev. Rogers secured a dainty little volume as a prize for guessing the greatest number of quotations in the specified time.

The serving of refreshments followed the literary program and here the stairway brigade seemed to take the lead.

This very delightful party was given in honor of Mrs. Clara Way, cousin, Miss Caroline Luscombe, who, with left Manistique for her home at Sault Ste. Marie the following morning after a visit of about seven weeks.

MISS RHODA'S MEASURE.

Miss Rhoda sat in the west doorway. Her face was turned toward the sunset, radiant with its rays of red and golden light; it was nature's "withdrawing breath." At Miss Rhoda's right was a field of stubble from which the wheat had been harvested. At her left the corn still stood, like Indian wigwags, all over the field, waiting for the burning fire. At her feet the maple leaves, so gorgeous in their autumnal plauds, were falling. Here and there the note of a stray bird which had tarried late, than its fellows fell upon her ear. There was a chill in the air; the wind was rising, and it stirred the locks of silver hair which usually lay with such calm precision about Miss Rhoda's face. She folded her black shawl closer about her shoulders, but still she lingered.

THE LORD STAYED HIS HAND.

There was so little left to warn her of the dangers that might come from longer exposure. No loved form came to the door and say, "Come in, my dear, the air is chill and the fire is rising brightly. It is best to go to the room without you." Miss Rhoda was alone in the world; she had outlived those nearest and dearest to her. In the afternoon of the lives of those who had belonged to her in the old home sweet memories looked upon the sunny day, and as she looked intently at the western sky she seemed to see

HE'S TOO CLOSE-FISTED.

A Miss of the parry gait, behind whose boots those black curls were dwelling. Watching the red and gold light fade away, and the darkness gather, she, like Christian, "fell sick" at the glimpse of the gloom, and wished she could be among them. As she turned and went into the house, there was a look on her face which, if an artist had caught it at that moment, might have inspired him to paint a picture and call it Rembrandt. The most notable thing after one has grown old is the fact of remembrance. But in some lives, like that of Miss Rhoda, it is a more deeply felt fact than in others.

THE LORD STAYED HIS HAND.

"I was passing Miss Rhoda's house just at sunset to-night, and I saw her sitting at her west door," said Mr. Bates, as he sat down at the supper table. "I know who was trying to work out the kinks and knots about the mortgage on her place. But old Tom Carpenter will foreclose when the time comes. She can't expect any mercy from him; he is too close-fisted for that."

THE LORD STAYED HIS HAND.

When Miss Martha told her how her home had been secured for her, she exclaimed, "I never thought before how Abraham must have felt when he was ready to sacrifice Isaac and the Lord stayed his hand!"

THE LORD STAYED HIS HAND.

about them which made it a hard matter to decide what to take and what to give up. There was the mother's old workbasket, once so full of the making and mending for the loved ones, and her copy of "Daily Food" lying in it, and father's well-thumbed Bible with here and there words of comfort and explanation written on the margins—lines of course must go with them.

WHY HE WAS SLAUGHTERED.

"You seem," observed the old cattleman as he rapped the ashes from his pipe preliminary to refreshing it with another content of tobacco, "You see this year Toopstick district disgraces Wolfville. That showtime, Downs a party. Toopstick Johnson does, no run and he's the same bled! plumb out of roole. Nacherly, while no one blames Toopstick, who makes the play what these law sharps calla buny bun, the public sort of longe for his lopement. An that settles it; Toopstick has to line out for different stampin' grounds."

CHRISTMAS RAPPINGS.

It was Arthur who planned a house-warming for Miss Rhoda on Christmas eve. The young men and young women of the church and town filed her household with wood and coal, and her cupboard shelves with things needful for the necessities of the body. The fathers and mothers joined in the work of love, and there was never such a thorough house-warming done in that locality before. A new light came into Miss Rhoda's face that Christmas. It was love-light—she was not alone in the world any longer; she belonged to her good neighbors, and they belonged to her.

CHRISTMAS RAPPINGS.

"No; but the finger on the signboard points that way," replied Arthur. "It is dreadful for old people to be obliged to give up their home and old associations and go where they would not," said Mrs. Bates. "Young folks can bear changes, many young folks do, but that is different with the aged."

CHRISTMAS KINDNESS.

At this season of the year, remember that it is your duty, children, and also your privilege, to glorify God, to promote peace, and to extend good will to these around you. You may promote the blessing of peace on earth by frankly forgiving those who may give you annoy you, by persuading enemies to be reconciled to each other, and by daily prayer to God preserve the nations of the earth from the deadly horrors of war.

WHAT MAKES A HAPPY CHRISTMAS.

It does not require much money, nor indeed any money, to make a happy home circle on Christmas. The chief thing is a warm and merry heart. It is not the things of the world, but the love of the home, and the joy of giving that makes Christmas a joyous time. It is not the things of the world, but the love of the home, and the joy of giving that makes Christmas a joyous time.

NEVER PULLS THE FIRST GUN.

When the protest is frivolous, a man's count under the head of business. "Well," says Toopstick again, "what ever be you all goshin' over, I shaks' Or maybe you're thinkin' of dopple me as a brother or somethin'," says Toopstick.

The value of a good telescope or glass was illustrated forcibly to a Maine hunter recently while he was after deer in an open space in the woods that had been hunted by a fire some years ago. The hunter had a tolerable clear range of vision for eighty or one hundred rods across the open, but beyond that he could see nothing but a hazy mist of blue and green. He was certain that a deer was on that hillside. After a bit he saw something moving in the bushes near a big clump of trees that had caught the eye, nearly ninety rods away. The something seemed small, and was of a neutral tint, not apt to be observed by a wanderer all at such a distance.

"This set from Red Dog," which Red Dog had in about as low-down, a hatch on Toopstick like he found his own, "I'm a camp—but as 'I'm sayin', this totterin' (hebratle) mentions, comes straight up, more or less genuine and vague, an' without sayin' a word or makin' a sign, or even shakin' a bush, stands about the length of a fart away, an' settles on Tooptick, settin' an' blinkin' his eyes right-malevolent."

A TAX ON BACHELORS.

The question of taxing bachelors has often been discussed by political economists, and in fact the experiment has been tried in some countries. The province of Salto, Argentina, for instance, imposes such a tax, and it will in future be a fine ground for the sport of husband hunting. Here is the scale of taxes which that enlightened province proposes to impose on bachelors:

The last hard snow-fall in North Dakota has shown that snow fences are useless for the purpose of fencing in or fencing out the festive blizzard.

There are a good many shortsighted people who seem to think that an immediate result of the election would be a general restoration of prosperity and are resentful because their dream was not realized.
