This is the old Vincents School, one of eight in use at one time in Thompson township, which is now seeking to build a new school and plans an election this year on the proposal. This picture was taken the 1870s. The school, torn away in the World War I period, was located just above Thompson on the Little Harbor Road.

The school building presently in use in Thompson township is shown here in early years after its construction, with a class in the early 1900s standing before it. The old wood building is rated not fire-safe and efforts are underway to build a new school.
