WRITE THEM A LETTER TO-NIGHT.
Don't go to the theatre, concert or ball. But stay in your room tonight! Deny yourself to the friends that call. And a good long letter write. Write to the old folks at home. Write when the day is done. With folded hands and downcast eyes. And think of the absent one.
Don't selfishly scribble, "Kiss me, haste, I've scarcely the time to write." Let your brooding thoughts air wandering back To many a bygone night When they lost their needed sleep and rest, And every breath was a prayer, That you would leave their delicate babe To their tender loving care.
Don't let them feel that you've no more need Of their love and constant care. For the heart grows strongly sensitive When age has dimmed their eyes. Be an hour or so to-day. You never forget them quite; That you deem it a pleasure, when far away, To long letters home to write.
Don't think that the young and giddy friends Who make your pastime joy. Have half the anxious thought for you That the old folks have to-day. The duty of writing do not put off. Let sleep or pleasure wait. Lost the letter for which they looked and longed For the sad old folks at home. With locks fast turning white. Are longing to hear from the absent one: Write them a letter to-night.—Waverly Magazine.

deal of fancy work every day. They grew tender very soon with their eyes, and finally came to exchanging smiles. At this stage of the proceedings Tom certainly thought he must be crazy. By-and-by he lowered to her. What was his delight to find that she stared fixedly yet pleasantly at him a moment, and then nodded back as gracefully as a spirit! Now he was beside himself in truth. He wished he had wings that he might fly straight across to her window. He wanted to throw himself out of his own window and go in some way through the air over to her, and hover about her charming face. One day after another went along, Tom more a victim to his feelings than ever. She sat and looked at him, and he sat and looked at her. In the course of his life, Tom had picked up, among other things, a sort of knowledge of the language of mutes. So he bethought himself that he would try an experiment with signs and dumb show. He made a few letters in the air. She immediately replied in the same way, making other letters in return. He was delighted more than ever, and found he had finally struck a vein. If he could in this way arrange it so as to talk with one another, the business was a safe and profitable one. By means of his signs he asked her christian name. "Bessy," answered she; "short for Elizabeth." "Mine is Tom," he replied. "What is the color of your eyes, Bessy?" "Black—with a hesitating smile. "Your's are blue; I can tell from here." "Are you a stranger in these parts?" "Yes; I am." "Friends boarding in the house with you?" "Yes, indeed." "I wish I had taken rooms there too," communicated Tom. "Why didn't I?" "We are all here now," returned his fair friend. "Throwing a kiss to her from the tips of his fingers, as he heard some one rap on the door, he closed half his shutter and sprang up to let in his head. Next day he returned to his exciting occupation, taking care to secure himself against sudden interruption. This was an adventure that occupied his thoughts and his heart. He was in for it in good earnest. This time he found his new amorata punctual at her post, and apparently awaiting him. Her face lit up with a smile, she bowed, and in response to his own advances, kissed her hand to him. This, surely, was getting on bravely. With his thumbs and fingers he went to work again. "I think you are beautiful," said he. "I feel as if I had known you always. Are you from the city?" "No." "Where?" "Not here. One in town; the other in California." Tom half wished they were both in California. "Relations with you?" "An uncle and aunt. That is all. But they watch me, you know." Tom here clasped his hands across his breast, made up a face of the most sympathetic pretensions, and declared he would like to tie them both up in a bag and hide them down cellar together for a month. She shook her head and curls at him playfully, as much as to say, "That never would answer in the world," for they were going to leave me something one of those days." "Rich?" pursued Tom. "Yes"—with her head only. Tom could have clasped the dear creature in his arms only for the distance that lay between them. "Now," said he to himself this girl's a prize. I'll have her or die in the attempt! Let me once handle the bonds and stocks that her dowry of an uncle is going to leave her, and I think I can make a different thing of life entirely. "I wish we could meet," he went on, "I have so much to tell you. I want to see you closer; take your hand; and talk with you. I want to hear you; to look into your eyes; and watch the play of your countenance. Can't we see each other here?" She hesitated. At length she gave a timid consent to his proposal. Tom could have died that minute, for joy. There he kissed his hands to her, rising to his feet and bowing. His manner was already that of a most positionate lover. "In the orchard," he suggested, known to the dwellers of Obed. The story got about very soon. Only one person really understood the secret of it, and that person was Bessy; but she was prudent when it was absolutely necessary, and nobody was ever the wiser for what she knew on the subject. "It was said that Tom Horn was cured of his amatory impulses; but there is no telling how that is. As likely as not, he will get into a worse scrape, ten times over, when the next summer shines over our heads. Such sad dogs will never learn a new trick—not even when it will protect them against the results of the old ones." REMARKABLE DISCOVERY OF MURDER.—The following account of a murder which was committed in Bermuda in the autumn of 1878, by the Attorney-General of the islands, Mr. Brownlow Gray: "In the autumn of 1878, a man committed a terrible crime in Somerset, which was for some time involved in deep mystery. His wife, a handsome and decent middle-aged woman, disappeared suddenly and entirely from sight, after going home from church on Sunday, October 20. Suspicion immediately fell upon the husband, a clever young fellow of about thirty, but no trace of the missing woman was left behind, and there seemed a strong probability that the crime would remain undetected. On Sunday, however, October 27, a vessel from the woman had disappeared, some Somerville boatmen looking out toward the sea, as in their custom, were struck by observing in the Long Bay Channel, the surface of which was ruffled by a slight breeze, a long streak of calm, such as to use their own illustration, a cask of oil usually diffused around it when in the water. The feverish anxiety about the missing woman suggested some strange connection between this singular calm and the mode of her disappearance. Two or three days after—why not sooner I cannot tell you—her brother and three others went out to the spot where it was observed, and from which it had not disappeared since Sunday, and with a series of fish hooks ranged along a line dragged the bottom of the channel, but at first without success. Shifting the position of the boat they dragged a little to the windward and presently the line was caught. With water glasses the men discovered that they had caught it in a skeleton which was held down by some heavy weight. They pulled on the line; something suddenly gave way, and up came the skeleton of the trunk pelvis, and the legs of a human body, from which almost every vestige of flesh had disappeared, but which from the minute fragments remaining and the terrible stench, had evidently not lain long in the water. The husband was a fisherman, and Long Channel was a favorite fishing ground, and he calculated, truly enough, that the fish would very soon destroy all means of identification; but never entered into his mind that as they did so their ravage, combined with the process of decomposition would set free the matter which was to write the traces of his crime upon the surface of the water. The case seemed to be an exceedingly interesting one; the case is not mentioned in any book jurisprudence that I have, and the doctors seem not to have experience of such an occurrence. A diver went down and found a stone with a rope attached, by which the body had been held down, and also portions of the scalp and of skin of the sole of the foot, and of clothing by means of which the body was identified. The husband was found guilty and executed."—Scientific American.

"SPECK SHE HEARD IT.—The Demopolis (Ky.) News tells the following story: "Our census commissioner reports a colored woman on Martin Rice's place 114 years old. Seeing that the old woman was proud of her age and her recollections of antiquity, he asked her some questions touching Gen. Washington's home and the revolutionary war, all of which were satisfactorily answered, he said: "Old lady, you must have heard the Heman Empee when he fell?" "I don't exactly remember the circumstance you spoke of now, but I heard a mighty rumble down your de stars fell, an' I spect it must a been dat. Things were constant fall in dat year, and if fell in old North Carolina, you bet your bottom rag, howed, I was dar."

THE WEEKLY AGITATOR.

ISHPEMING, MICHIGAN, AUG. 28.

The Republic is credited with having shipped, up to Wednesday last, the handsome product of 153,988 gross tons of iron ore...

Work at the Keystone mine was suspended a little over a week ago, and will not again be resumed, for a time at least.

As will be seen by our tables, the mines of the Upper peninsula shipped from the opening of navigation up to and including Wednesday last, 1,104,158 gross tons of iron ore.

The handsome output of iron ore from the mines of the Upper peninsula up to the present time this season, goes far toward showing that this region is fully capable of supplying for years to come all the ore that is demanded of it.

The Town hall, after which they again boarded the train and proceeded to L'Anse, where their steamer was in waiting to convey them to Houghton. Thursday and Friday was consumed in looking over the copper mines and other industries of the copper region. Late last evening, according to programme, the Institute left Houghton for the north shore, and on Tuesday next will visit the mines of the Menominee range, that being the last point to be visited on the peninsula. Papers will be read and discussed on the steamer at intervals during the trip on the lakes, and at the present visit of the Institute has been looked forward to as likely to be productive of much good to the entire Upper peninsula, the Agitator will at some time in the near future endeavor to publish at least that part of the proceedings of the meeting as refer to the Lake Superior country. Everything possible, we believe, was done by the local committee and leading citizens of this county to make the visit of the distinguished gentlemen and their lady companions as pleasant as possible, and the meeting of the Institute of unusual profit to all concerned, though the weather has been sadly disagreeable during the entire week—in fact, the worst of the season. We sincerely hope that the reception and treatment of the gentlemen at all points on the peninsula has and will be such as to reflect credit on the people of the entire Lake Superior region.

SHIPMENTS.

The fluctuation of prices in the American iron trade is one of the evils which perhaps necessarily accompany its development into permanency and health.

It can be avoided by the adoption of a broader commercial and industrial policy. Looking at the fluctuations over a series of years we see ups and downs which might have easily been avoided if far-reaching management and wisdom had been employed.

and trifling causes, which cannot be extended to do, and hence are better able to stand reverse than they can come, and to meet contingencies that may arise from bad crops, pestilence or war.

THE WONDERFUL ADAPTABILITY OF PAPER.—The adaptability of paper to numerous important and widely varied uses is wonderful. What other substance can be so satisfactorily substituted for wood, iron, and such common materials, to the extent that paper can be?

A WORD OF CAUTION.—This is the part of the month when statistics begin to pour into the newspaper offices; when editors point with pride to the increase of exports and imports, and to the excess of one over the other, when the "balance of trade" is stated as being for or against us, and wise predictions based thereon.

Official statements up to the present time show that our foreign commerce has been the largest during the last twelve months ever known in the history of our country. But it should be noted that whereas the value of the exports exceeded that of the previous year by about 18 per cent, the value of the imports of this year exceeded that of the preceding year by about 50 per cent.

Europe buys comparatively nothing of us but necessities, and if our purchasing of luxuries continues at the same rate every year, a single bad year for American farmers would have a very serious effect on our financial condition, for our exports of manufactured goods would go but a little way in making up any serious deficiency in the products of agriculture.

Business Notices. I am now receiving applicants direct from the publisher. These thousand barrels of choice hand-picked winter apples for sale.

So long, therefore, as this inordinate desire exists to spend our surplus savings for luxuries, a desire that extends through every grade of society and every section of the country, we should not be too fond in our boasts of prosperity. It would be well to look at the other side of the question, and if possible create a public sentiment averse to the extravagance into which prosperity is likely to lead the very persons who can least afford to be extravagant.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

MANUAL LABOR OF MACHINERY.—The majority of those who seek employment as wage-laborers have ever been led by their prejudices to oppose the introduction of new machinery whereby the time required to do a given amount of work is materially lessened. A fear seems to have taken possession of many minds lest by the inventive genius of man machinery might be produced capable of accomplishing so much as to remove the necessity for manual labor, and as a consequence, lest they themselves should be unable to gain a livelihood. So widely have these views been imbibed, even by men of apparent intelligence of a comparatively high order, that they have advocated in strong terms, upon the rostrum and elsewhere, the desirability of not only limiting new machinery but inventors also.
