

for making his plans for the <sup>next</sup> National

" Given the reality of
of human numbers
and the reach of modern technology, I do not see how
environmental disasters
are likely to be averted by the decision-making
of small governmental
units."

Walt Anderson, editor
of the fairly hair-raising Politics and Environment

(Hodgson Pub. Co., Inc.
Pacific Palisades, Cal. 1970.)

1969

In an<sup>a</sup> article called
"The Public Be Damned," reprinted in the book,
Justice William O.
Douglas said: "The Army Corps of Engineers is public financing number one."

As Steward Udall
has recently
written: "Of all the ransacked rooms in nature's house, no<sup>1</sup> has been more abused -- nor in so short a time --
than the Great Lakes."

(Same words)